One day When Prince Siddartha with a large retinue drove through the eastern gate of the city on the way to one of his parks, he met on the road, an old man, broken and decrepit. One could see his veins and muscles over the whole of his body; his teeth chattered, he was covered with wrinkles, he was bald and hardly able to utter hollow and unmelodious sounds. He was bent on his stick and all his limbs and joints trembled. Who is that man ? said the Prince to his Coachman, weak, his flesh and his blood are dried up, his muscles stick to his skin, his head is white, his teeth chatter, his body is wasted away. Leaning on his stick, he is hardly able to walk stumbling at every step. Is there something peculiar in his family, or is this the common of all created beings ?

‘Sir’, replied the Coachman, ‘that man is sinking owing to old age, suffering has destroyed his strength and he is despised by his relations. He is without support and people have abandoned his like a dead tree in a forest’. But this is not anything peculiar to his family. In every creation youth is defeated by oldage. Your father, your mother, all your relations, all your friends, will come to the same state, this is the fate of all creatures’.
